Child Custody & Support

1 With whom do the children reside?     Petitioner     Respondent     Other _____

2 Custody Arrangements (Choose one A, B, C or D)

A  SOLE CUSTODY with VISITATION

Decision making authority is exercised by the parent with whom the children live the majority of the time, the custodial parent. The other parent has the right to parent-time (visitation) with the children according to the parent-time (visitation) order in the final divorce decree, and will usually have to pay child support to the custodial parent.

Who will be the Custodial parent     Petitioner     Respondent

B  SOLE PHYSICAL CUSTODY with JOINT LEGAL CUSTODY

Both parents share decision making authority, but the child(ren) will reside primarily with one parent. The other parent will have parent-time (visitation) rights. Child support will be based on the number of overnight stays in each home and each parent's gross income. Joint legal custody can be ordered only if the parents agree to this type of arrangement and the court finds that the parents will be able to cooperate and work together for the child(ren)'s best interest. The law states that joint legal custody may prevent the receipt of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF). The court will only order joint legal custody of the child(ren) if it is in the best interest of the child(ren) and either: a) both parents are capable of sharing joint custody by putting the interests of the child(ren) first and being able to make decisions together. b) both parents agree to a parenting plan included in the final divorce decree.

Who will be the Custodial parent     Petitioner     Respondent

C  JOINT CUSTODY

Both parents share decision making authority. In addition, the children will be living with both parents. This means the child(ren) will spend a certain number of nights in each parent's home. Parent-time or visitation can be set for those times when the child(ren) are in one home for extended stays. Child support will be based on the number of overnight stays in each home, and the respective gross income of each parent. The child(ren) must spend more than 30% of the overnights in a year in each of the parent's homes to use the joint custody child support worksheet.

D  SPLIT CUSTODY

If you have two or more children, you split their living arrangement between both parents. That is, one or more children live with one parent, and one or more children live with the other parent. Each parent has sole legal custody of those children who live in their home and the exclusive right to make decision concerning those children. Parent-time (visitation) is worked out so that both parents have parent-time with each of the children, and often times, a parent will have parent-time with all of the children at the same time. Child support will be based on how many children reside with each parent and each parent's respective gross income.
